

Medical Training Disclaimer

Effective Date: Aug 1 2026

Valour Emergency Preparedness provides emergency preparedness, first aid, wilderness medicine, search and rescue, and firefighter training designed to develop practical skills and improve confidence in emergency situations.

Our courses are educational in nature and are intended to prepare participants to recognize hazards, make informed decisions, and provide appropriate assistance within the scope of their training.

Training Is Not a Replacement for Emergency Services

Valour training does not replace professional medical care, emergency services, or the judgement of qualified healthcare providers or emergency responders.

In an actual emergency situation, participants should:

- Assess the scene for safety
- Contact appropriate emergency services when required
- Follow local emergency procedures
- Provide care within their level of training and ability

Scope of Training

Course content is based on recognized emergency response principles and may include:

- First aid and CPR skills
- Bleeding control
- Patient assessment
- Wilderness medical considerations
- Firefighter emergency response skills
- Incident management concepts

Training requirements, procedures, and recommended practices may vary depending on the course, certifying organization, location, and current industry standards.

Student Responsibility

Participants are responsible for:

- Participating safely during training activities
- Following instructor direction

- Recognizing their own physical limitations
- Maintaining their skills through continued practice and appropriate recertification

Students should not perform skills beyond their training, experience, or personal capability.

Training Environment

Many Valour courses include hands-on practical activities that may involve:

- Physical movement
- Simulated emergency scenarios
- Outdoor environments
- Fireground or rescue-related activities

Participants are expected to communicate any concerns, injuries, medical limitations, or accessibility needs before participating.

Certification and Competency

Successful completion of a course indicates that a participant has met the requirements established for that specific training program.

Certification demonstrates completion of training requirements; however, it does not guarantee a participant's ability to successfully manage every emergency situation.

Real-world emergencies involve unpredictable conditions, and outcomes may depend on factors including environment, available resources, patient condition, and response time.

Limitation of Liability

Valour Emergency Preparedness provides training intended to improve emergency readiness and response capability.

Participants and organizations remain responsible for their own decisions and actions during emergency situations.

Valour Emergency Preparedness, its instructors, and representatives are not responsible for outcomes resulting from:

- Actions taken outside the scope of training
- Failure to follow safety procedures
- Misuse of learned skills
- Circumstances beyond reasonable control

Commitment to Quality Training

Valour Emergency Preparedness is committed to providing realistic, practical, and field-focused education that helps individuals, organizations, and emergency responders become better prepared when it matters most.

Field Ready. Not Just Certified.
